

 You may not need it now.

But when the time comes that you want to upgrade to another car or own a home, that's when the painful truth sets in.

Your poor credit scores won't allow you to buy anything, not even qualify for a low interest credit card offer and, might even affect your bid to look for a job.

If you haven't looked at your credit report recently because you're assuming there's nothing wrong, you might be in for a surprise.

8 out of 10 credit reports have errors (wrong first/last name/suffix, wrong social security number, wrong address, wrong employment information, etc. etc.) OR You may be a VICTIM of FRAUD.

What do you do if caught in this predicament?

Wouldn't it be SMART for you to know and understand your credit report now rather than later?

Wouldn't it be nice to learn how you can handle those inaccuracies?
